THE FIRST INDIAN IN SPACE

Rakesh Sharma was born on January 13 1949 in Patiala (present-day Punjab) India. His family moved to Hyderabad which enabled him to join the National Defence academy after completion of his school. Rakesh Sharma was commissioned into the Indian Airforce as a pilot in 1970. He flew 21 combat missions in a MiG-21 fighter jet during the 1971 Bangladesh Liberation War. In 1982 he was chosen to become a cosmonaut as part of a joint initiative between India and the Soviet Union (now Russia). He underwent rigorous training for two years at the Yuri Gagarin Cosmonaut Training Centre in Moscow as part of which he was locked inside a closed room for 72 hours to see if he was claustrophobic. On 3rd April 1984 Rakesh Sharma entered the Soviet rocket Soyuz T-11 which was launched from the Baikonur Cosmodrome in the Kazakh region. With Sharma's space voyage, India became the 14th nation in the world to send a man into outer space. In all, Rakesh Sharma spent 7 days, 21 hours and 40 minutes aboard the Salyut 7 space station. The crew members aboard the rocket conducted various scientific and technical studies with Rakesh focussing mainly on remote sensing. Over the years, Rakesh Sharma was promoted to various ranks in the air force and retired as a Wing Commander. In 1987 he joined HAL as the Chief test pilot at Nasik but later moved to the Bengaluru division in. He retired from flying in 2001.
